

Look hard-you'll see that musical liberation is directly connected with women's liberation. Music pulls together many strandsfrantic exhibitionism, bare emotion, cool self-assertion, needs, and wishes. It defines our moods, and can encourage our stands on issues- it affects us so deeply. That is why it was a righteous experience when women, with things to say and a need to be heard, took the stage. Sure, they burst forth long before my short life began, but it is now more apparent to us. These crooning gals have moved from the shadowy, perfect, but unknowable figures, to the powerful figures screaming about womens liberation, love, politics, feelings, cars, flowers.. anything they want to.

These "ladies" put even the most fierce punks, viscious haters, or bigwig male musicians to ruins. Look at the talent around you, look at your local women revolutionary musicians, look at Ani Difranco, or the Raincoats, or Excene Cervenca, or Bikini Kill, or Sleater-Kinney... Part smart parody, part artful predator, they represent a new way to be.

Music boldly and aggressively lays out what people love, hate, and want, challenging its listeners to do the same. I personally love to take up this challenge regularly- always taking advantage of any oppurtunity to expose myself to new musical types and try to keep an open mind about it all. It adds a new flavor to life.

However, I'm going to focus specifically on women in music for this article.

The musical world is not without amazing women, but they are definitely a minority, and many of the most amazing female musicians are easily overlooked in this commercialized, male dominated world. These women do not fail to seize the world. These women are proud of who they are, and could care less what the critics say, women who speak out for all other females, proud and loud.

Punk, for example, inspired a whole new genre of female rock stars, who rather than deferring the cannons of femininty, would use them as material- for takeoff, renovation, cutting evalutation, or all of the above. Just hear her scream and the chills run up your back. Just can't help but feel empowered by these strong, screeching, guitar playing, and hardhitting women

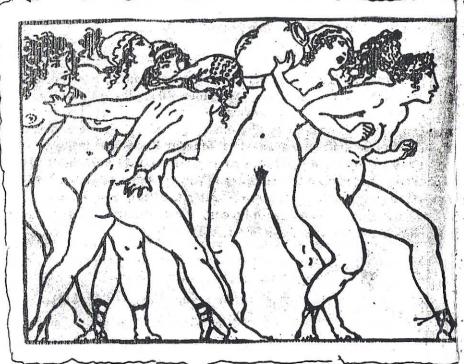

PROM ONE EXTREMES TO ANOTHER # # 55

We, as Radical women, are fighting for freedom. We are fighting for the right to make our own decisions, to be our own person, make decisions based on our own conscience, what's best for us, and what feels right. We do NOT want to be the collective submissive "36-24-34" doll face worrying only about what HE will think about any decision we make. We are growing our own conscious sense of pleasure and self-assertiveness.

In this battle we should be fighting for not just women's liberation, but also OUR OWN individual liberation, remembering that we want to have the right to make our own decisions just as do the many other autonomous souls fighting for like causes. This is why I feel it is necessary to point out that women who make rules and stipulations for other women, such as 'you're conforming to the beauty myth if you like to wear a little lipstick and eyeliner', or 'a true feminist wouldn't wear a tight skirt or show off her body', are taking steps backwards. This is encouraging conformity among women and, while women need NEVER dress or live to please men, neither do we ever need to dress or live to please a golden standard of femenism among each other.

S SE

I do not, by any means, agree with women feeling it necessary to wear makeup, revealing cloths, fixing up their hair up, or any other task they may not enjoy because that is debasing to us ladies. That is allowing the beauty myth to control our lives. We need to first find the beauty that each one of us possesses inside of us. This is the most empowering, individualized, mesmerizing, and important beauty any one can and ever will have. We cannot patch our flaws with cover up or congealer, but we can grow as individuals from embracing them. It's

DON'T ATTACK IRAQ: War is not the answer

Letter published in The Seattle Times, Aug 30, 2002

As I have talked to friends and neighbors about the emerging plans to attack Iraq, we are horrified by the possible repercussions of such a move. We also believe that the United States must play a far more positive and statesman-like role in world affairs.

The old way of the world has been to make war. We know that force never succeeds—it only offers the fleeting satisfaction of revenge or an illusion of power. Violent interventions multiply suffering due to poverty, hunger, poor health, along with demolition of lives and property. The price is much too high to dream the wrong dreams—or to act on the dangerous delusion that violence is our only choice.

The new way is to take positive actions that value human dignity. This is why it is crucial that this war must be stopped. For Congress the time to "Just say "Yes'" to Bush's worldview is over. If Bush can't say "No" then someone else has to put on the brakes. Instead of losing face, a relieved world may come to respect our government as a true peacemaker.

Kathryn Keve

An open Letter to Congress, September 4, 2002

It seems clear that even if Congress "debates" the proposed attack on Iraq, a resolution in support of war is expected.

It is stone-age thinking to see war as the only strategy. Intelligent and non-violent solutions are available in any situation. 9-11 did not entitle America to strike first, use nuclear weapons, or dismantle democracy.

Are we really willing to sacrifice 1000 American lives, or who knows-100,000--and meanwhile drive the American economy even further into debt?

If we send our young men and women off to war in the Middle East, all of everyone will forget about corporate accounting reform, pension reform, CEOs on trial, civil liberties, environment concerns, drilling for oil in Alaska, the threat of Star Wars (SDIC), or any other vital domestic issue.

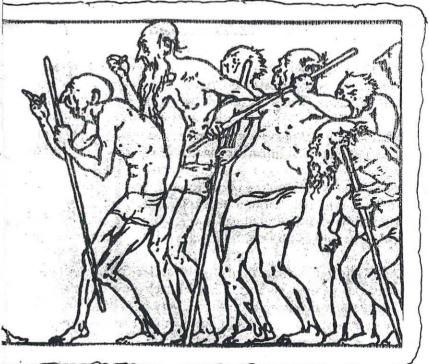

And if we're at war, who would rock the boat by voting against the President's agenda?

Please do not jump on the bandwagon of war. It takes a great deal of courage to say "No" to a move that is being portrayed as heroic and patriotic. War is neither. It is simply destructive and therefore cannot make the world a safer place.

All natural, unshaved legs, "de-brawed", shaved head, and tie and slacks, can make just as much of a statement for feminists as ruby red lips, cat eyes, go-go boots, lace up tops, or any other imaginable (or unimaginable) outfit. You are women! You have a cunt, congratulations. You have breasts, woohooo! You smile when you are happy and cry when you are sad. You are angelic and feisty. You are whatever the fuck you want to be... and THAT is what we need more of.

So, please, fellow feminists embrace who you are and how you like to look, but do not try and enforce this dress code upon others. Embrace and make a statement with your all-natural self, or use the former trappings of femininity to, likewise, make a powerful rather then passive statement irony has become the important "accessory" of the decade, and feminism is finally being set free of its dress code. We dress like girls. We dress like boys. We dress like women. We dress like men. We are unwilling to conform to traditional ideas about gender and sexuality. Embrace, No longer apologize for who you are!We must understand very clearly what it means when were told, "It doesn't matter what you look like on the outside; its what's on the inside that counts."

Warfare on the proletariat

Poverty-our governments sickest means of control. Within poverty is everything else society finds disgusting and vulgar- mass drug addiction, prostitution, theft, and all other poverty inspired crime. All this and more, bound around a legendary cycle of violence as old as the invention of government. destitution and poverty exist largely because wealth is tipped in the direction of a few privleged masters, those who control our government, our economy, and in short our lives, the majority of crime is a result of poverty. criminals are rarely born and crimes of passion make up only a small percentage of all crime. most often, criminals are made by the unrelenting economic hardship that is poverty. And to combat the results of their own capitalist government, police are hired. The police exist to prevent criminals from committing crime, while keeping the imbalance of wealth. tipped favorably to their masters, so as to continue the government inspired cycle of bloodshed. Does anyone bother to realize that crime is a result of poverty? Does the government who imposes the imbalance of wealth in the first place do anything to relieve the poverty in crowded urban areas? No. Instead the american people demand that the government expand the existing police forces to make sure that "dangerous" criminals are stopped and put behind bars. More police to oppress the people we call criminals, people who have been forced into the irrevocable choice between survival and extinction. More rednecked oppression to control the people. Its a never ceasing war upon the proletariet.

Crime never ends while their is poverty. poverty never ends while their is government. poverty+police=crimes of

"ITS ONLY WHEN YOU'VE LOST EVERYTHING THAT YOUR FREE TO DO ANYTHING"

The greed has settled in, consuming the land. It causes one to miss out on life, love, and passion. Life flies by and delivers so much to your doorstep, but once the blinding perpetual want for more settles in, the possibility of being genuinely happy and appreciating what you have becomes slim. Instead, that which you do not possess becomes readily apparent- sucks the joy right out of you. Lost and wandering, feeling nothing but unsatisfaction.. in your quest to gain more and more you've lost yourself. Love for money is nothing but injurious. See the blessings and glory all around you and me now!! Don't let yourself blend in with the billions who allow themselves to simply exist with out actually experiencing the bliss of living.. Don't allow yourself to become like them and create a consuming greedy void. What a terrible way to live! What a terrible way to die....

patriotism to a dead icon avails nothing

I cannot, in my good conscience, feel any patriotic fervor to the evil alliance of organized oppression that our government perpetrates. To be patriotic to freedom and equality is beautiful in it's own right, but I must ask, is the flag really a symbol of freedom, or a symbol of oppression? What is the driving desire to assign an emblem to freedom? Is freedom and equality, alone and only, American? Why should I stand and pledge my undying loyalty to an emblem, a peice of cloth, which represents our government, the very core of division and oppression? Could I not instead stand with all patriotic fervor and pledge my loyalty to the idea and journey of freedom?

but the glorification of government

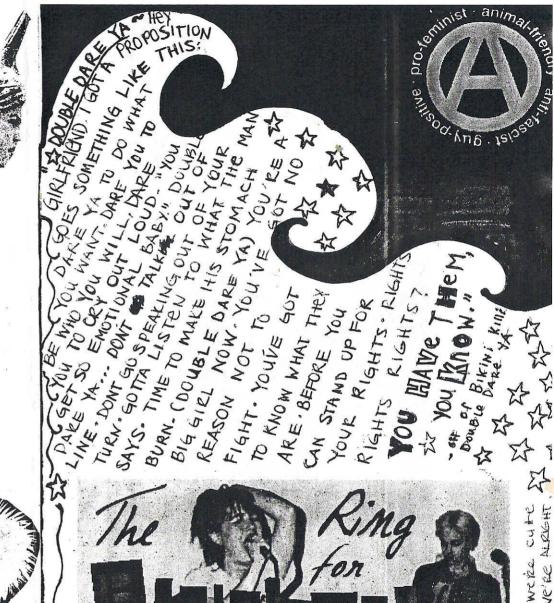

Civilization exists on all fronts of human habitation, in both mere appearance and mind. It can either be considered all the good of our modern world or the true evil and oppressor of mankind (as the primal anarchists argue). between these radical extremes of opinion, it becomes clear to me that civilization is neither evil nor good. It is the definition of civilization that shapes the nature of it, that we as humans perceive. If civilization is simply a mechanism of superficial appearance and untouched tradition, then it is oppressive. But if civilization is defined as a condition of the heart to be achieved over time, seeking to free oneself from the perversions of physical appearance, accepted traditions, hate, and anger, to pursue self-control, then civilization cannot be a vice to suffocate the minds of the masses.

While the word "civilization" changes with definition according to the defining society, in our world, civilization is almost always perceived as the outwardly conditioned appearance and mannerisms of a person. No society exists today that isn't governed by a form of hierarchy. Hierarchy and the power that its ruling class holds creates the illusion of outward "civilization".

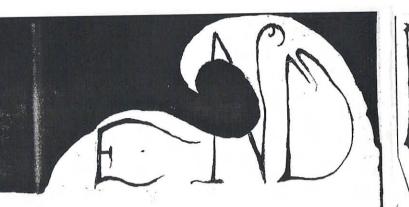

This definition of civilization gives priority to the physical appearance affluence, and mannerisms of person, such things either damning a person from being "civilized" o glorifying their civilize appearance. Defining civilization as such makes the poor, needy radical, and foreign of each nation uncivilized, while making the rich well-off, conforming, an submissive civilized in societie eyes. The civilized human wear clothes as conforms with his or he society, talks as is acceptable, act as is acceptable, and holds view o traditions as are considere acceptable in that society Civilization as so perceived neve exists beyond the outwar appearance and rarely touches the inner desires and mind of persor unless to force a surrender and submission to accepted, unwritten laws of society. For this reason, "civilized" human may commit th most blasphemous and evil act against his/her fellow humans, a long as the illusion of civilization i maintained. That is why pervers egotistical giants, politicians corporate kings, and religiou puritans who we have as leader over us may do as they please and still be considered civilized Whether the strictly theocrati civilizations of the east or th nihilistic consumer civilizations c the west, this always remains true.

POVERTY IS NOT REVOLUTIONARY

As of late, there's has grown a trend among Crimethinc. operatives to espouse shop lifting, dumpstering, and squatting as an act of revolution. While as a whole, the Crimethinc. collective puts out a lot of excellent original anarchist literature, I find this crusty-anarcho obsession with using poverty and necessity as a form of revolution to be little more than ignorant. The majority of the worlds population exists under the chains of some form of dictoral hierarchy, which results in almost all of the world surviving within the cycle of forced poverty. The struggle of anarchy is a class war to bring equality and eliminate the class system, not to dress up the proletariat existence like some kind of party. What I find this endearment of poverty doing is attempting to make a horrible existence look fun and strut it about with impunity in the face of the ruling class. Further than that, it makes the punishments and personal struggles of those who thieve and live out of true necessity much tougher. For the average Caucasian crusty punk, shop lifting and squatting just appears to be middle class teenage rebellion, something to grow out of. But for those who are forced into that kind of existence (especially those of color), the struggle to continue that way is made twice as difficult by the actions of these middle class rebels. Making life a living breathing revolution, beyond the part-time revolutionary, is important, But making poverty, the center of your revolution is no revolution at all, just lame attempt to excuse the ignorance of real poverty and its consequences ...

Gun Revolution as lies meant to keep us simply

The economic sanctions on Iraq are perhaps one of the most overdebated arguements whose solution is clear. These sanctions are a form of terrorism and are only solvable by dissolving them. Despite the solution, the Bush administration continues to uphold the sanctions, in favor of political control and dictionary definition terrorism. As everyone knows the sanctions kill more than they save, not as they were so intended. Though they were originally instituted to remove a dangerous and perhaps psychotic despot from power, the sanctions have instead served to kill of the poor of Iraq, few if none at all of whom support Saddam. On top of killing innocent Iraquians through withdrawing necessary supplies, it has given Saddam the opportunity to exploit the resulting malice and hatred of his people and direct those consequential feelings towards America, demonizing America as the stubborn agent of their suffering. Likewise, the American people are given and image of Iraq, all its poeple, as being synonomous with the demonized image of Saddam.

In response to the sanctions and the massive number of people they are killing off, a man from Seattle, Bert Sacks, disregarded sanctions which prohibited importation of any goods. He brought necesary medicines into Iraq, which were and are desperately needed by medical centers. This act of civil disobediance and individual responibilty acosted Bert Sacks a $10, 000 fine. Working with several groups, both faith based and community organizations, Bert Sacks is continueing the act of civil disobediance through Voices in the Wilderness and will campaign to raise $10,000 to purchase medicines for health centers in Iraq. Contributions are anonymous and will serve to end these economic sanctions.

Advertising is an enemy of freedom like no other. Advertising kills free desire, free thought, free consumption, and equal trade. Nothing else so maims free desire and individual will than to be constantly bombarded with advertisements selling a new patented desire in a desperate "have to have" kind of way. We've all seen it: billboards plastered with scantily clad models; TV ads starring the ideal looking man driving a shiny new car to the beat of some best hits band; Budweiser beer adds on Super Bowl Sunday compelling and convincing the viewer that social alcoholism is cool and absolutely necessary. A multitude of advertisements on every side of you, the consumer, burning in your already fried heart, the blueprints for a new desire. Do you really need this? Is this really necessary? Do you really want this? Do you have a choice? Or is your every desire governed by the capitalistic pressures of mass advertising? And all so you can make a rich few even richer- to support the wings of your capitalist masters yet more. What is necessary and essential to life you hardly ever hear about. No, very rarely do you ever hear about products that apply direcly to your survival. the major pressures of advertising in this country goes towards selling unnecessary "things", forging a previously nonexistent desire in people to "Have" the product for sale. This, in such a way, kills your free will- the things you truly feel an interest in or actually need. Of course There's nothing wrong with making people aware of the existence of a product, so long as making those people aware doesn't mean coercing or compelling them to buy. But along the streets, on the screen, and in the papers everywhere you'll find no advertising that isn't bent around deception. Where do your desires lie? When you Buy a product, do you buy it because you really need it or have a genuine interest in it; or are your desires the creation of violently coercive advertising?
